Policy Analyst

Oded Gurantz received his M.S. in Applied Economics and Finance from the University of California, Santa Cruz and B.A. in Mathematics from the University of California, Berkeley. His Masters thesis examined U.S. government regulations that targeted precursor chemicals used to produce methamphetamine, and their effect on decreasing the purity and reducing availability of the chemicals. Prior to his graduate studies, Oded worked for three years with Project SEED, teaching higher mathematics to elementary school students in Oakland and Richmond, California. In addition, Oded spent time teaching elementary school students in South Korea and at the Escuela Mayatan in Copan Ruinas, Honduras.
