

Sarah Miles

Research Associate
Youth Development and Engagement

Sarah Miles is a developmental psychologist trained in quantitative methods who focuses social development and learning particularly for low-income youth. Sarah Miles earned her doctorate from the School of Education at Stanford University and, prior to that, she worked as a Research Assistant for ETR Associations on a project evaluating school safety and health programs for the San Francisco Unified School District. In addition to her doctorate, she has her Master's degree in Social Work from the University of Pennsylvania, worked with youth in foster care as a social worker, and taught bilingual fifth grade in Oakland, California.